In December of 2014, the Cardiac Safety Research Consortium (CSRC) received a letter from a group of CSRC members expressing concerns that commercial marketing materials related to a CSRC Scientific Oversight Committee approved program may have created the perception that CSRC was endorsing a specific commercial technology. After review of the issues raised by the members, the CSRC Executive Committee agreed that a clarification statement was in order. In addition to sending this statement to our members, the statement will be available on the CSRC web site:

The mission of the Cardiac Safety Research Consortium is to advance regulatory science specifically related to pre-competitive cardiac safety issues through the collaborative means of a public-private partnership across interested stakeholders. The CSRC stands fully ready to encourage, contribute to, embrace and support elements of clinical science such as good scientific design, data analysis, interpretation and dissemination to the public domain within the construct of the resources and committee structure of the public-private partnership forum.

The CSRC does not endorse specific commercial technologies, entities, products, or services. Any communications to the contrary, written or otherwise, are inaccurate.

On behalf of the Executive Committee we hope that this provides clarification both for our members and for any other interested parties.
